With the passage of the Right to Education Act (RTE), 2009, universalizing elementary education and making it a fundamental right, India's commitment to providing education to all has taken a giant leap. However, even as the law is translated into action, there is a need to delve deeper into the loopholes in the Indian educational system to aim at a more holistic development. It is disturbing that the dropout rates among Indian students are astonishingly high even though India has one of the largest higher education systems in the world.

The Fire of Knowledge, the fourth volume in the continuing series on Unleashing India, not only identifies and analyses in detail the deficiencies and fault lines in the Indian education system, but also comes up with innovative strategies to address the educational needs of the country. The author compares the higher education systems of India, China, the US, Singapore and other countries, makes a case for inclusion of practical training in the college syllabi, enhanced infrastructure in education, increased investment in curriculum and textbook development, and suggests encouraging equitable access to education through public and private funding.
